"What Americans are Doing Now is Beautiful"

"Americans across the country are making their own decisions for our collective well-being. You're seeing it in small stores deciding on their own to close; you're seeing it in restaurants evolving without a government decree to offer curbside pickup or offer delivery for the first time; you're seeing it in the offices that closed long before official guidance arrived; you're seeing it in the sporting events, concerts, theater productions, and other live events that evaporated last week day by passing day. For many of these people—from bartenders and store owners to indie bands and gig workers—these decisions to stay home or close early are surely among the hardest they've ever made, a decision to voluntarily forsake income to minimize the harm and health risks for people they may never meet and never know they've helped."
